1 Chebika Mountain Oasis Lakes

Lala: Chebika is, along with Tamerza and Midès, one of the three most famous mountain oasis in Tunisia. Its main attraction is a picturesque fountain, located at the bottom of an old Berber village, with small palm trees and a waterfall. It feeds a few underground streams and a network of underground channels that supply wells, through which fruit trees are grown in an otherwise completely barren territory. This oasis owes its prosperity to a sophisticated irrigation system that ensures balance and keeps an equitable distribution of water to all fields. There was a curious room (behind the public toilets) which had a peculiar clock consisting of two pitchers that were hung on strings at different heights to allow the water out from one to the other. Based on the time it took to fill the bottom pot, a gate opened or closed the irrigation system. The best way to explore Chebika and the palms is up the rocky path that leads to the ruins of the old city, where there is a magnificent view of the Lower Atlas mountains, forming a canyon of 150 m high with palms at the bottom. Then you go down rock stairs to a beautiful canyon. The path leads to a small waterfall that feeds a spring. Return via the path that runs along the canyon and climb the stairs again. Upstairs is a "touristy" area with stalls selling drinks and souvenirs. We came up here on a 4x4 trip that we hired in Nefta.

2 Carthage Ruins

Aorijia: You will feel the weight of history in the ruins of Carthage, but only if you love it. If not, what will call your attention is the havoc and extreme carelessness that have developed over time in a place that should be of importance. With the passage of time, some looting can be understood. What is extremely disappointing is to find that this UNESCO World Heritage Site (1979) has been ignored to the point of obvious decline. The ruins are scattered, often at the side of the road and, more often still, buried under the Tunisian "jet". The Presidential Palace itself, which must have had fabulous views of Carthage and the sea, was built on the tanks that fed the baths of Carthage. Unfortunately disappointing.

3 Port el-Kantaoui Beach Beaches

Miskita: The best part of Tunisia are the blue waters so clear and warm. It's a calm place that still isn't fully exploited by tourism. There's also a luck factor, since we were told there was a lot of seaweed on some other local beaches. Our only gripe was the two jellyfish which stung us, but the mosquitos were basically non-existent. The hotel staff gives you a cream which takes the sting away. You can also do jet-ski, be towed by boats, go sailing, etc. But afterwards, there's nothing better than laying down a comfortable chair with a comfortable mat on under a sun umbrella doing nothing more than listening to the surf and getting a tan.

bele: We were five couples who went with our kids and we had a great time. Even though we noticed that they're very sexist. I think the shops there try to get every penny out of the tourists there (bread for today, nothing for tomorrow). Our

4 The Baths of Carthage Ruins

Virtu: The truth is that with an organized excursion you do not have much time for anything, and in my case I had a few hours less to visit the city. It is a pity that the baths have not been better preserved because in their time they must have been impressive, for this reason they were the second highest in importance throughout the Roman Empire.

5 Djerba Beach Beaches

Iantoni: When I was at the beach I went to a club hotel ideally situated. Never been to Tunisia nor in Djerba but I found it all very pleasant. The beach is very good and, above all, the sea is beautiful! The Mediterranean with its green and blue, and a rather pleasant temperature ... Just thinking about this I want to go again!

6 Bourguiba Mausoleum Historical Monuments

Iamaga: The Bourguiba family mausoleum is one of the main attractions of Monastir. It was built in 1963 and later expanded. The former Tunisian president and his family rest here. This huge and beautiful marble building with a gold dome has two 20 metre tall minarets flanking its sides. But the most striking is the wide promenade that leads to the mausoleum, which is lined with Tunisian flags. Do not miss it.

7 Bourguiba Mosque Mosques

Iamaga: The town of Monastir has several interesting mosques, oftentimes very modern. Undoubtedly, the most important is the Great Mosque. I was particularly struck by the great "Tower of Faith," the Islamic tower that calls the people to prayer. It is difficult to go beyond the main courtyard, but it costs nothing to try

Kairouan

Lenka Skalosova: This mid-sized city is located in Tunisia. Its main attractions are the Medina (old market), The Great Mosque (one of the oldest in the world), and Sidi Saheb zaouia ("Mosque of the Barber"), which is home to the tomb of a companion of the Prophet. Supposedly, they have had three of the hairs of his beard preserved as relics.

Zitouna Mosque

Iamaga: All the mosques in Tunisia pay homage to Ez-Zitouna, the city's main mosque. The building that we can see today is a fascinating fusion of buildings from different periods, with columns and capitals from ancient Carthage, an Ottoman minaret and Zirid domes. Non-Muslims are only permitted to access the central courtyard, from which you can make out the hypostyle hall. However, just from seeing this one, you get an idea of the grandeur of it. Although I personally prefer the smaller and more accessible mosques, it is also good to contemplate those more formal and monumental mosques. A recommended place if you go to the capital.

Kairouan Great Mosque

SerViajera: Muslims come to Kairouan not only from other Tunisian cities, but from different parts of the Arab world. The fourth most important mosque for Muslims in the world after Mecca, Medina and Jerusalem, the Grand Mosque of Kairouan which was built in the ninth century, is the oldest in North Africa. It is visited for several reasons. Located on the edge of the medina, when you almost leave the city, a huge tower-minaret stands out against the clear sky. Surrounded by brown and bare walls, from the outside it does not look like the typical Moroccan or Turkish mosques: in fact it looks more like a fortress. But upon entering the courtyard with marble slabs one is amazed by its beauty. Impressive is the colonnade that surrounds the courtyard, the endless arches, and gateways to the prayer hall. The Grand Mosque was, for me, an incredible discovery. Not only for its architecture but because it also exudes an atmosphere of infinite recollection.

Matmata Troglodyte Houses

diana r s: Matmata troglodyte houses are definitely a must-visit place. The structure alone is impressive, with a central courtyard of different emerging "corridors" dug on the land itself and leading to the different rooms. They usually have a lot of animals out the front of the house, such as chickens, horses, donkeys ... The lifestyle they have may surprise you, as it seems to be one of extreme poverty. In time you realise that for them the things we consider essential are completely unnecessary in their daily lives.

Roman Amphitheatre of El Jem

Iamaga: The Roman amphitheater in El-Jem is the largest in Africa and the fourth largest worldwide. In my opinion it is better preserved than the Coliseum in Rome, because at least it is possible to go down to the sand and go through the aisles. The lion pits are preserved and the complicated system of cisterns. It's a must see if you visit Tunisia, its size and beauty are really impressive. It represents the best legend of the Roman Empire in this country along with the baths of Carthage and the Bardo Museum in Tunis. One Iamaga: The puerta del mar, which is now called France's Door is what divides the fascinating Medina of Tunis with the modern part of the city. Its appearance is majestic, and is reminiscent of the old forts or Ribats that were found in that area. It's the perfect entry to the magical world of shopping and markets. I recommend that you take a moment to admire its beauty and majesty. It was as if we entered into a medieval fortress, when in fact we'd come to toil away our money!

Andres Gamiz Jimenez: South of Tunisia and the Sahara desert trail we found a huge desert. It wasn't a sand dessert, but rather one made of salt. Chot El Jerid extends dozens of kilometers and we crossed it through a long, straight road. At one point we stopped on a "strategic" path at a souvenir stall (mostly desert roses), in the middle of nowhere. 17 Ribat Palaces antartida: We went to Tunisia with a friend ve has lived there for over 25 years and now lives in Spain. His family lives in Monastir, so we chose this town to make our start. His family was amabilissima and they treated us like kings, they had a fleet of taxis and the family was dedicated to it. The first day we spent at Monastir, for its souk, by the port, we smoked shisha at a café and had tea. And then we went to visit the Ribat. It's great. Next door is the cemetery of Monastir, where the father of our friend happens to be buried. We went to visit his grave. Most are made of tiles, or sometimes just a pile of sand. We saw a funeral, and there was a line of people waiting for the dead relatives to give them bread. We were told by our friend that was a tradition. Then we entered the Ribat, with amazing views of the city and the ocean. It was constructed in the year 796. You can access everything. We climbed up the highest tower, Nador and the views were amazing. One could see the immensity of the ocean, the promenade next to the cemetery and the mausoleum of Bughiba, a type of mini Taj Mahal, which was constructed in Bourguiba for burial. It is worth a visit, and my friend told me that was the scene from Life of Brian.

20 Streets of Sousse Streets

lamaga: The center of Sousse is an amalgam of narrow whitewashed streets, with surprising hills. Tunisian family life takes place in the houses - in the patios - an inheritance of all Spanish 'Al-Andalus'. The small streets are cool and calm and in them you can find the find the other side of Tunisians: men and women and traditional family. There is a great contrast with the open and talkative marketers souk.

21 Tunis Central Market Markets

lamaga: The capital of Tunisia is a show of aromas and voices. It's the ideal place to find out about this market! Among the stalls there's meat, spices and couscous, and we also found black-kohl-dye you can line your eyes with, as well as henna and natural sponges. Of course, the most interesting thing to do was to go to the stalls of spices and seeds. Spices like cardamom, pepper, cinnamon and saffron, which are all used in Tunisian cuisine, are places in large felt sacks. Put your fingers in the seed bags, smell the scents of jasmine and musk, you won't be rushed.

18 Dougga Roman Theatre Historical Monuments

Beya Jebali: There are many historical monuments that attract attention in Tunisia but today I will make reference to Dougga, a declared World Heritage by UNESCO in 1997. It is 100 kilometers from the capital and they are the best preserved ruins in North Africa. Visiting Dougga is reliving the past and you will be surprised by the scale of the buildings. There are circuits that lead to it and excursions. If you can rent a car and take time to visit it, is better. And bon voyage!

19 Túnis-Carthage International Airport Airports

Lala: Tunis-Carthage International Airport is located about 8km from both the Tunisian capital and the ancient city of Carthage. Although the country has several airports, this is undeniably the most popular and receives thousands of passengers each year. The international code is TUN, and companies that operate here include Tunisair, Air Europa, Alitalia, Air France, and Lufthansa, among others. There are duty free shops, cafes, bank, money exchange offices and rental car offices. If you fly in from Europe, you'll have to present your passport and fill out the little visa card. They will give you a receipt that you must be careful not to lose, as you'll have to give it back when you leave the country. To get to the downtown from the airport, you can take a taxi (between 4 and 7 DNT), or Bus 35 which drops you off at the Avenue Habib Bourguiba (0.60 DNT, every half hour).

Apart from the obvious attractions that go hand in hand with a very special landscape, I could not help noticing the curious places along the way. They are always located close together (remember we are on the edge of the desert), shops that sell the famous desert roses, black sand or just a bottle of water. What is definitely strange, there is no doubt about it, are the signs in Spanish that are scattered everywhere "cheaper than Carrefour", "cheaper than the whole one hundred" ... Even Tunisian posters flaunt their good humor and tireless spirit of sellers and merchants.

27 Rue Jamaa Ezzitouna

Lala: Zaytuna Zamaa Street, along with rue de la Kasbah, is one of the most important streets in the Medina. It's lined with souvenir shops, although you can find the same things but much cheaper in the back streets. The road rises steeply from the Place de la Victoire to the Great Zaitouna Mosque. The whole area is a very busy and crowded. You can find shops selling Nabeul pottery, handmade talismans from Fatima, cages, stuffed camels, and more. The vendors speak virtually any language (they say: "hello ... Spanish? ... Italian? .. as you walk by). At the top of the street, there are several typical pastry shoppes and Café Ez- Zaytuna, where you can have a mint tea and smoke a hookah. At the end of the street, you can see the eastern gallery of the Great Mosque which is lit up at night. From here, turn right, and you'll find the carpet store " Au Palais d'orient ", which I'd suggest entering only to climb to the roof and enjoy the good view of the mosque

The views are breathtaking and I'd personally recommend it to anyone who wants to get the best views of the bay of Sidi Bou Said with the Mediterranean Sea in the background. The place is not paved because it has only recently started to receive tourists. The guide took us to precisely this viewpoint because it was one of his favorites and receives the least number of people.

You should try to arrive in good time and explore the Medina in the area where there are no tourists, the type of shops and the atmosphere are completely different from the other part. It is very interesting to see how they live and develop their life there, the area of the "jewels" is fantastic, it is not known if they are old and do not look very good, but it is worth taking a look.

Olga: The Avenue Habib Bourguiba, aside from being one of the longest streets in Tunisia, is also one of the most popular. It's lined with cafes, stores, modern hotels, and colonial-style buildings, which is why it's popularly known as the Champs Elysees of Tunisia. Personally, I was really impressed by the colonial buildings, a striking contrast with the old Arab buildings.

Olga: Sousse beach in the caribbean seems completely isolated from everything, with fine white sand like flour and the Mediterranean Sea bathing its shores. Keep in mind that the city of Sousse is the second largest in Tunisia and has a lot of hotels, hence its beach is very well maintained and they are constantly cleaning it. In my case the part of the beach from my hotel was well kept and guarded by hotel employees, even though we had the area of our hotel blocked off and they would not let people who did not belong to the complex enter.

Here you can find all kinds of souvenirs and typical shops, and of course you need to practice the best and most popular art in Tunisia, which is bartering and haggling. Most souvenirs are hand made by its vendors. Personally I liked the bird cages which were impressive. I think they are all rated depending to the work of the craftsman himself.

34 Sahara: Sunset in the Dune of Offra

Lala: Given the sweltering heat and the scorching sun that usually characterizes the desert, all excursions / tours such as camel rides, quads, or buggy are usually scheduled early in the morning or late in the afternoon, so with the tour comes the added appeal of watching the sunrise or sunset in the desert. Our group chose the afternoon, we went to the Great Dune at 16h for the camel ride by the "sea of sand", so we had a chance to see the sunset. It is reddish, and is seen between the winding sections of the dunes and the changing color is a beautiful show. The only problem was that there was a horrible sandstorm (apparently in spring they are very common), so it was quite uncomfortable because the whole time we were in the dunes were literally eating sand.

Lala: The medina of Tozeur is basically formed by the neighborhood Ouled el-Hadeff, the oldest in the city, which has remained virtually unchanged since the 16 century. It is 50 m from Central Market , along Av Kairouan. Built in the 14 century to house the Hadeff clan, enriched by the caravan trade. The medina is not very big, a few covered streets and small squares, but it is known for its unique traditional architecture that uses brick projections on the facades of buildings, forming a characteristic geometric decoration. This style is special to Tozeur Tozeur. Apart from walking the narrow streets and seeing the little shops of the souk , the small Museum of Archaeology in the former koubba of Sidi Bou Aissa. Close to crowded hotels, tourist racking and haggling, there are whitewashed adobe houses among narrow streets, passageways under arcs with some inaccessible areas by any mode of transportation other than animals. All you'll find is a site stuck in the past where you can breathe peace and the smell of the Mediterranean.

Lala: If we had not been guided by a local Tunisian we do not think we would have visited this souk, among the maze of tunnels and streets of the medina. It was Sunday afternoon (day off), so Medina was deserted, and this further souk is in a rather quiet residential area. It is located on a side street off the popular and busy Rue de la Kasbah. It is worth a walk around, because in this area the houses are typical Andalusian architecture, as it was built by them in the fifteenth century when Muslims and Spanish and Portuguese Jews were expelled from Spain (why it is nicknamed "Andalusian quarter"). White walls, blue windows, doors studded ... It looks like Sidi Bou Said. It is a Historical Monument of Tunisia.

This tour usually lasts about three hours and costs about 25 to about 13 per person (of course though it depends on who is offering it and if you are registered or not, because if for example You buy it at the hotel is much more expensive). The tour takes including food which is usually based on fried chicken and fish, fruit and soft drinks Coca-cola type or water. Personally I think it's worth doing because it is also quite fun and you stop the ship at sea to have a swim and the duration of the tour you spend watching the dolphins with whom you're crossing.

There is a staircase to reach the lookout inside Dar el Annabi and, since it is one of the highest in the area, the views are great. 45 Theatre Municipal de la Ville de Tunis Lala: The National Theatre is one of the city's most emblematic buildings and is almost opposite the Catholic Cathedral, in the middle of Avenida Habib Bourguiba. It's a good example of art nouveau architecture of the colonial city, designed by French architect Ferdinand Resplandy JE and built in 1902. It has been declared a historic monument. The original building had capacity for 1,000 spectators, in 1912 it was enlarged to 1,200 but kept the original facade. It seems to be made of meringue that highlights its arched galleries (forming ground floor access, and on top forming a balcony) and is decorated with white floral plaster reliefs and fantastic figures by the sculptor M. Belloc. Masters of opera have performed here and it's still the main place for performances/cultural events in the country, with an extensive program of theater, music (classical music concerts and Arabic), screenings, lectures, etc.

Great Dune of Offra

Lala: The Great Dune of Offra is must-see for every tourist who visits the city of Douz. From here various excursions to the dunes of the Sahara desert begin (buggy rides, camel rides, bikes, quads, ATVs, etc.). Around the dune a tourist area has been created, with hotels and tour agencies, which is 3 km from Douz. The Sahara is the largest desert in the world and has different types of landscape (rocky, sea salt and sand). However, the sand dunes (or "erg") are the landscape that are inevitably associated with the desert, perhaps influenced by major film productions. The Great Dune of Offra is just a small "tail" belonging to the Grand Erg Oriental, extending from here to Morocco. However, the vast sand before us was really impressive, the soft sand dunes are extremely thin, they are shaped by the wind and change color depending on the sunlight. The scenery was wonderful (despite a sandstorm) and the sunset was indescribable.

In my opinion, the most important thing about this avenue is its fantastic location, going right along the Sousse beach and creating the city's promenade. This avenue meets Avenue Hedi Chaker and joins both the avenues together to form one of the most important avenues in the city of Sousse. They are important in terms of tourism demand as they take up the majority of Sousse's beach.

Olga: Gutxi Haitz Céspedes Murias: Rent a car in Tunisia, from a local home, no European agencies. Miles of empty roads, going nowhere ... A handful of houses in the middle of misplaced infinite sand, making the most of a jet of hot water spurting up from the ground. Leave everything behind you and walk through the desert, between the dunes, toward your own destiny.

48 Lighthouse of Ras Qatarjaham

Olga: Qatarjaham Ras lighthouse sits right at the end of the Avenue of Taleb Mehiri, one of the extremities of the village of Sidi Bou Saïd. This is one of the least visited monuments. According to our guide this lighthouse was built on the ancient Ribat Sidi Bou Saïd. Most striking is that it was almost hidden between the vegetation and the area. Right next to this lighthouse is the Ras viewpoint Qatarjaham , where you get fantastic views of the Gulf of Tunis.

Cemeteries

49 Cemetery Beduín

Lala: At the entrance of the Bedouin village of Sabria is the cemetery, which tourists are forbidden to approach and access. It doesn't look like a tourist attraction, in fact, it doesn't differ much from other cemeteries in Tunisia unless it is completely surrounded by sand, in full Sahara dunes. All graves are arranged in rows in the same position: Looking to Mecca. The particularity of Muslim cemeteries is that the bodies are buried directly in the ground, wrapped in a sheet just scented (no coffin), so there are no major tombs.

50 Mosque of Sidi Sahab

Lala: This important mosque is located 1.5 miles northwest of the Medina , and is one of the most important places in this region, as it contains the [poi = 153431] mausoleum of Abu Zama el-Belaoui [/ poi] (sahab or companion of the Prophet Muhammad). You can access it via a highly decorated marble hallway that leads to a stunning central white courtyard. The mausoleum lies in the courtyards, and at the opposite end of the courtyard you can visit the tomb of the architect Mosque Sidi Okba . The mosque was built around the important shrine during the 17th Century, under the leadership of Mohamed Bey. A madrassa was also constructed in the same year (it means religious school). The most striking thing about the mosque, in addition to its beautifully decorated courtyards, is its high minaret with an impressive dome interior.

Villages

Tamezret

Lala: Tamezret is a picturesque village located on top of a hill overlooking El Dahar, just 10 km from Old Matmata by road from Douz and Kebili (C-104). It is a stone village, whose houses have excavated parts underground. Unfortunately, this is being lost because the residents are moving into new concrete houses, and the village is deteriorating gradually. The maze of streets was recently paved with tiles, in the upper part of town is the main square, with the city, the mosque and a typical cafe with Berber decoration.

51 El-Kachachine Hammam

Lala: The Hammam The Kachachine is in the heart of the medina, one of the souk booksellers. It is easily recognizable by its doors that are painted with stripes of black, green and red. This is one of the most famous Turkish baths in the ancient city, dating from the Ottoman period. The Turkish bath is a complete ritual where hygiene is combined with relaxation. Similar to the Roman baths, going through different kinds of sauna rooms where the temperature is variable, it is amazing to see how people rub the body vigorously with horsehair gloves for a complete exfoliation of the skin.

52 Zaouia - Abu Zama El-Belaoui Mausoleum

Lala: In this zaouia or mausoleum lies the tomb of the famous Abu el-Belaoui Zamaa (Ibn Abi Ubayd Zamaa The Arquam The Balaoui), companion of Muhammad who died in the battlefield 50 km away from Kairouan, before the city was established. Although the original mausoleum dates from the 7th Century, this one is from the 17th Century, around which the Sidi Sahab mosque and a madrassa were constructed. The mausoleum is located in the northwest corner of the yard, and under the dome lies the tomb of Sidi Sahab, splendidly clad in green and white. The zaouia is a sacred place for Muslim worshipers and it is also an important place of pilgrimage. Tourists are prohibited from entering inside. However, if you pay the small price of a dinar, there is often a man who will offer to enter the mausoleum with your camera to take a picture for you.

Ride in Horse

Olga: We were offered a kind of excursion combining horseback riding, camel riding and a horse wagon. The horseback ride was quite comfortable as the instructor taught you to ride and lead the horse in a way that was not too fast. It's great fun, the landscape is not the same as the Sahara desert, not so hot. Here you constantly see olive trees since the ranch is located just outside the city of Sousse in an area full of olive trees. I have recommended it to everyone who is visiting Tunisia as it's a good way to ride a horse or camel without going through the full heat of the desert.

Lala: Habib Bourguiba International Airport is located about 9km west of the city of Monastir. A taxi ride from the city center costs about 5 DNT and takes about 20 minutes, or you can take a train (the station is about 200 meters from the terminal). It is an international airport and offers no domestic flights. Companies that operate here include Tunisair, Karthago Airlines, Nouvelair Tunisia, Air Berlin, and Transavia, and destinations include Paris, Dusseldorf, Berlin, Munich, Bilbao, Madrid, Milan, and Amsterdam. Keep an eye out for the porters, who will "help" you with your bags without asking, before asking for a substantial tip (they wanted 10 DNT from us!). There are a number of shops where you can do some last-minute shopping to try to get rid of your dinars before leaving the country; these are souvenir shops with the same merchandise you can find in any souk in the country, but at higher prices. After the police check in the departure

Lala: Monastir is a nice coastal town bathed by the warm waters of the Mediterranean. Located in the Gulf of Hammamet, it is one of Tunisia's main tourist resorts for both Tunisians and foreign tourists. One of the most beautiful places in Monastir is the marina filled with luxurious yachts and boats. There surrounding neighborhood also has a lots of elegant houses decorated in white and blue. I felt more like I was in the south of Spain than in Tunisia!

Olga: Among the many tourist deals offered by the seaside village of Sidi Bou Saïd are their viewpoints, which are located in many different streets. The best of these viewpoints is Sidi Chabaane which is located at one end of Sidi Bou Saïd. From this viewpoint you can get the best views of the different attractions such as Sidi Bou Said marina, Mersa beach and Abu Said al-Beji mosque, among others.

Lala: The Licinianas thermal baths, or winter baths, were built in the 3rd century, but reformed in the 5th. Because of its great size, these baths are considered to be one of the most important Roman spas in Maghreb, this is due to the variety of treatments offered there, such as; a gym, hot room, warm room, cold room, dry heat, massage, etc.). Everything here is quite well preserved. Its structure respects the symmetrical distribution around the warm and cold rooms. The main entrance can be found 6 feet above the floor of the baths, via a staircase that goes down to a room surrounded by a portico with 12 columns, paved with mosaics and geometric decoration. A hall gives way to the left to the cold room, which occupies the center of the building, and the warm room (around which all the other rooms opened), and then spent the hot room.

Lala: At the end of the promenade, there's an old port in the luxurious urbanization of Cap Monastir. The houses are small apartment chalets that are well maintained (some sported the sign "sold"), with whitewashed walls that make the windows stand out and turquoise railings (as in Sidi Bou Said). There's a Marbella-style beautiful marina and a promenade on the seafront that's full of bars and restaurants. The area's upmarket and high priced but it's very nice to go for a walk and drink or eat on the terraces.

Lala: Another excursion that can be done in the desert from Douz is the carriage ride through the Sahara. The tour leaves from the Great Dune Offra , about 3 kilometres from the city centre, and lasts approximately one hour ($10/person DNT). It's fun because they dress you up in a robe and a turban, attire typical of the desert Berber tribes. Usually it moves in a kind of caravan. The camels go first, and finally the carriages. Well, the "carriage" is actually a covered wagon, pulled by a small horse, the wheels are tires, and the seats are covered with typical striped blankets. They have two rows of seats, with little space between them. The guide sits in the first seat, and the back is for two passengers (it's quite uncomfortable because there's almost no legroom). It's quite a light walk if you don't want to ride a camel.

Lala: The Koubba Sidi el Mezzeri Cemetery is one of the most striking spots in Monastir and is located next to the Citadel on a small plateau above the Mediterranean Sea. One of the things that draws your attention is the fact that the graves are all white and perfectly aligned. This is because Muslims must always be buried facing Mecca. Among all the identical graves there is one exception: the Mausoleum of Habib Bourguiba (former president of the country), a grand marble building inspired by the Taj Mahal.

lamaga: Like any other tourist destination in Tunisia, Monastir hustles with a market and business negotiations. That is, this is not a quiet town, especially because it is the preferred destination for Europeans who want to bask in the sun on the beaches while staying in a cheap hotel. We went during Easter, and although the beaches were not at their best, we could walk along them pretty quietly. You will see posters and interesting expressions, though it is less wild than other small towns in the area, like Sousse.

Olga: Of all the many trips that I did during my journey around Tunisia, the one I most learned from was the one that allowed me to see how the old Arab tribes that remain in the wilderness used to live. I arranged the trip through my hotel. Among the many curiosities that I found, the greatest thing that I saw was a camel drinking Coca-Cola. One of the most typical activities of the women was making artisan bread in an oven in the land that was shaped like a bowl or vase, but we got to try the bread and it was very good and quite hot by the way lol ... But as we were discovering about their daily lives, we also saw how they used the camels to collect water.

62 Virgil and the Muses Mosaic

Iamaga: The Virgil and the Muses Mosaic is the most famous mosaic on display in the Bardo Museum, and is considered the best Roman mosaic in the world. It shows Virgil writing the Aeneid, accompanied by two of the Muses: Melpomene for tragedy, and Clio for epic poetry. It was originally located on the floor of a third-century Roman house in Sousse, and it is the only surviving portrait of Virgil. He looks thoughtful and concerned, perhaps aware of the enormous responsibility that comes with writing the Aeneid, the book that chronicled the origins of the Roman people. The room is fascinating and has a mosaic showing the divinities of the days of the week, and another the signs of the zodiac.

Lala: Of all the remains of ancient cities of Thugga, this one definitely has the most evocative power: Their settlement dominates the surrounding landscape because it's on a 600 meter high hill. Its dimensions are impressive at 65 hectares, and the things there are well-preserved. This archaeological site occupies the eroded hillside on a large olive grove. There are fields of grain (mainly wheat) and the deep valley. Dougga combines its majestic buildings with beautiful surroundings.

64 Dromedaries Fetching Water

Olga: Among the various activities here, I got to ride on camels and horses on this ranch which is located just on the outskirts of Sousse. One of the most interesting things to see here was to see the camels employed in activities of daily life, daily. We held an exhibition of dromedaries collecting water from the well and pouring it into a kind of pond used as laundry. The dromedary bound him with ropes and made him back up for pushing and pulling of water from the well and with a pulley and then basically just threw it into the water ... Very very funny! The truth is that both my travel agency and I recommend that everyone go to the desert and stay in one of these hotels, in my case it was my hotel Abou Nawas boujaafar, and be sure to go for the excursion to interactively perform all the things they offer from: horseback riding, or if you prefer camel ride, or more tired than that was the donkey ride or wagon ride pulled by two horses. Restaurants

Lala: It was the last day of our holiday in Tunisia, and we were feeling fed up with the same old food over and over again (coleslaw, chicken, and orange) in hotel buffets and restaurants, so we decided to try to eat something a little different. We didn't have a long time - we'd be going to the airport at 3pm - so we ate in the Lala Kahlia restaurant, the a la carte restaurant located in the Hotel Monastir Center, where we were staying. The restaurant is in a small building, separate from the main hotel, and right across from the pool. We were the only customers, and the chef paid us a lot of personal attention, perhaps thinking we were rich tourists! The menu offered several options of meat and fish. We had octopus and calamari, which were delicious, to start, followed by a grilled sea bass (OK but not amazing) and a beef tenderloin (although it was tender, it had too much gristle). The funny thing was dessert: I wanted a variety of fruit, and the chef offered us what I thought was a fruit salad, but when the chef brought it to our table, it was ... an apple, three oranges, a banana and a few strawberries. Whole pieces, unpeeled! The truth is that this is not a cheap option in Tunisia, a country where you can eat for 3 or 4 euros. We paid 20 euros a head, but we ate pretty well, and you have to keep in mind it's a la carte restaurant of 4 star hotel in one of the touristy areas of the country. We also ordered a small Iamaga: Although Tunisia's varied cuisine is vast, especially in regard to wines, meats and sweets, the national dish is couscous. Served with vegetables or meat, it can be delicious. But be careful with some of the varieties! Tunisians tend to eat very spicy couscous with a red sauce that looks very appetizing at first sight. It's a good idea to shun more touristy restaurants in favour of local ones but you are never sure what you will get. One of my first experiences with the couscous in Tunisia proved disastrous for this reason - fifteen people tried to eat my dish and only one could! And he was from Tijuana! The dish was very tasty, but for the rest of that day we ate bread and drank coke ...

Olga: The Sidi Chabaane Café is in the street of the same name (Calle Sidi Chabaane) and probably one could say that the second most important coffee is in the Tunisian town of Sidi Bou Said, after the famous Café des Nattes, also known as Café de las Esteras. Like all Tunisian cafes it is very quiet and people gather - our guide told us that many men play any of the typical local games such as dominoes or chkoba. It is also typical to smoke a water pipe with different flavors of snuff, nicotine is cleaned by passing through the water, and supposedly it is much healthier, it is usually called hookah. It is really worthwhile to sit on the deck and watch the breathtaking views. The most requested are the two small terraces that overlook part of the city with the sea in the background and provide a good overview of the main street, curd shops selling all kinds of souvenirs and stalls where you can, and should, practice the difficult art of haggling for a

So useful that I knew I was called a few friends and clients who had been long ago, who recommended strongly that I passed by the restaurant Le Lido de Sousse and the truth is it was a real success loved by all four of us that went! The food was very well prepared, with good flavors and even though the dishes were typically Arab, they really were not too strong of flavors. The specialty is fish, because in addition to being in front of the port of Sousse it looks like you're eating something freshly caught! Lala: The Monastir Center hotel is located on the Avenue Habib Bourguiba, five minutes from the seafront. It's a four-star hotel, but looks can be deceiving ... when we arrived and saw the building, the reception and outdoor pool looked great, but the hotel itself was pretty lousy. The lobby is quite spacious and bright, with high ceilings, and a sofa area. From here you can access the pool, two hotel bars, and a buffet restaurant where breakfast is served. The outdoor poolside area was very nice, with a bar and some tables. There's also a small stage where, in high season, they put on shows at night (so be careful if your room is overlooking it). The furniture is very basic and functional: two beds with bedside tables, a desk, TV (a luxury in Tunisia) and wardrobe. There was also air conditioning, but we didn't need it. The bathroom had modern tiles, suggesting it had been recently renovated. It was small, with a shower cubicle rather than a bath, and the basin and toilet behind the door. It seemed okay until we tried to use it ... water dripped everywhere, and the shower didn't drain well. When we went to bed, we realised that there weren't enough blankets for comfort, and the sheets were also placed in a strange way. We were staying on half board. 2 Yadis Ibn Khaldoun Hotel

Lala: Ibn Khaldoun Hotel is a 3-star hotel in the center of Tunis. However, it is about a 40 minutes' walk from the real tourist area (Place de la Victoire), and a taxi costs about 3-4 DNT (about 2 euros). It was our first hotel in Tunisia and the truth is that I didn't like it at first but after experiencing others on our tour of the country I have to say that it wasn't too bad. From the outside, the building looks pretty run down. It's 11 floors high and the facade, which should be white, is completely dirty. The reception, though, is all polished and gleaming marble. The room was pretty small and shabby. The furniture was yellowish wood, and it had two single beds pushed together, with bedside tables and a small desk with a mirror and trunk. On the table was a TV (not available in all Tunisian hotels). The floor was carpeted and the bedding and curtains looked a bit tacky with their identical floral blue pattern. The bathroom was quite nice, though. It was

Ignacio Izquierdo: Crossing the desert to reach this luxurious oasis is really worth the effort. On one side, you're surrounded by a sea of sand dunes which is a welcome change from the more steppe-like deserts in other parts of Tunisia. This particular oasis is home to rooms, but each room just happens to be a desert tent. Outside, you're in a magical oasis setting but once you enter the tent you find a space that's tremendously comfortable to spend the night: an enormous bed, tea tables, a large bathroom, and even AC! The rest of the facilities are good, too...there's a pool and a tower where you can enjoy the views. I'd suggest getting up early to watch the sun rise over the dunes.

Cristina E Lozano: This place really combines desert and luxury (well, all the luxury to be expected in a desert). You sleep out in camp-style tents but all have a shower and bath, Zai Aragon: The best part of the hotel is the location: in the center and very close to the entrance to the Medina (Puerta de France). The rooms and the bathroom are spacious. The bed is comfortable and the curtains cover just the right amount of light. The worst part: you can smoke in the rooms and it smells like snuff (there are small details that show that the hotel has seen better days, and the decor is somewhat outdated, but it shows that when it opened it must have been a great hotel. The restaurant is open to the public. During the day the sun shines through the glass roof, a game with the lights.

Miskita: Well, it's not one of the most well-known hotel is Tunes, nor is it a five star hotel, and it's surely not a hotel that would make the huge hotels in the area jealous. However, this hotel does offer impeccable service and generous, the pool amazing, especially when you come from desert hotels two stars, and the small apartment in which we stayed, very cute. The only downside is that in summer, at least for what we come to know us, sauna, indoor pool ... Everything was closed, which was a bummer. I, to Tunisia, I am looking forward. I just need to find somebody to go with!

8 Mövenpick Resort & Marine Spa Sousse

Zai Aragon: The Mövenpick hotel has everything that a luxury tourist can expect: from a glitzy reception decorated with palm trees, to the staff uniforms. On arrival you are greeted with tea and orange blossom scented towels to refresh you. The rooms are very big, has a spa and outdoor pools, breakfast with more than 100 tables ... At the reception one can find a piano bar, which is very popular in this area and what I am looking at right now.

9 Zona Residencial de Cartago

Lala: The ruins of Carthage were declared a World Heritage Site by UNESCO [/ b] in 1979, but not everything in Carthage is ruined. Currently the 13 kilometer periphery is one of the most luxurious and exclusive in Tunis. It's lined with elegant mansions and embassies. One of the things that stuck out to me is that the Presidential Palace (where the President of the Republic lives) can be found right next to the Antonine Baths, which are protected by a long white wall. Our tour guide warned us not to take pictures because it's forbidden to photograph any official building (including this one). The whole environment is monitored with cameras and armed police officers. When we got to the bus in front of the main gate of the palace it was amazing. It's beautiful, and I couldn't help remembering the movie "Empress Sissi."

johana: We arrived, and they immediately offered us a little welcome cocktail ... there are great pools, sun loungers, umbrellas, everything you need to relax! Then, there's the huge restaurant, with a huge array of options for breakfast - little pancakes with jam or sugar, different breads ... in addition, there is an indoor pool and several restaurants, bars, shops, and a nightclub. You'll never feel bored!

11 Maison Dorée Hotel

SerViajera: Excellently located on Ville Nouvelle (I walked back at night without any problems). This hotel is a great option for budget travelers. With a French atmosphere that's decadent and antiquated, but very clean and comfortable, the Maison Dorée has rooms on several floors, connected by a grand staircase. The rooms are all different. I was there twice: The first time I was there I stayed in a room with curtains, decorations and red bedspread. The second time I was in another room that was painted blue with yellow details. All rooms are spacious, with high ceilings, ceiling fans (some even have air conditioning) and comfortable bathrooms. The hotel also has a restaurant that serves good Tunisian dishes.

12 Erriadh Hotel

SerViajera: This little hotel is a surprising and delightful discovery. In Houmt Souk, the largest city Djerba the Erriadh is located in one of the old funduqs, with typical strengths of Djerba. A beautiful courtyard shaded by a huge bougainvillea, the hotel rooms are very clean, with windows overlooking the patio and ceiling fans. Bathrooms are private, and generous hot water.

13 Rosa Beach Hotel

lamaga: The Hotel Rosa Beach is a very economical option and can be recommended for those travelling to Tunisia in large groups, as there are many offers for such trips. With a varied buffet restaurant, where you can find both international cuisine and Tunisian dishes and good facilities (pool, disco, gym ...) it is a good choice. The best point: it is on the beachfront and close to bus stops. The worst point: the poor condition of the beach.

Damaso: In the tourist area of Hammamet, not to be confused with the village area of Hammamet. Although the distance is approx. 7 km, the 2 areas do not have anything to do with each other. Here are hotels located almost directly on the beach. The hotel is four star, but you have to take into account a country that is not governed by European standards. The rooms have sea views and pool, very clean indeed. Dealing with Spanish tourists is a bit passive. Most tourists are Germans, Italians and French and they don't minube: The ancient Phoenician accountant was born in Carthage, is now a fishing port where you can go to relax, called Tabarka. This place offers the warmth of the sea, the resort which extends between the beautiful beaches and woodlands. We are 170 kilometers away from Tunis. A few steps from the cliff, from the rich faunas, flowers and corals. The reception team will make you feel comfortable throughout your stay.
